Surveying as a career

There is a shortage of surveyors to meet the demand for the surveying profession. Surveyors work indoors and outdoors. They take measurements using specialised equipment in the field and then analyse and interpret the results back in the office. They work on a variety of projects and locations.

Graduates are likely to secure a job after graduation due to the demand. An average of 90% of graduates in full time employment earn a median starting salary of $52,000.
